

William G. Moffett

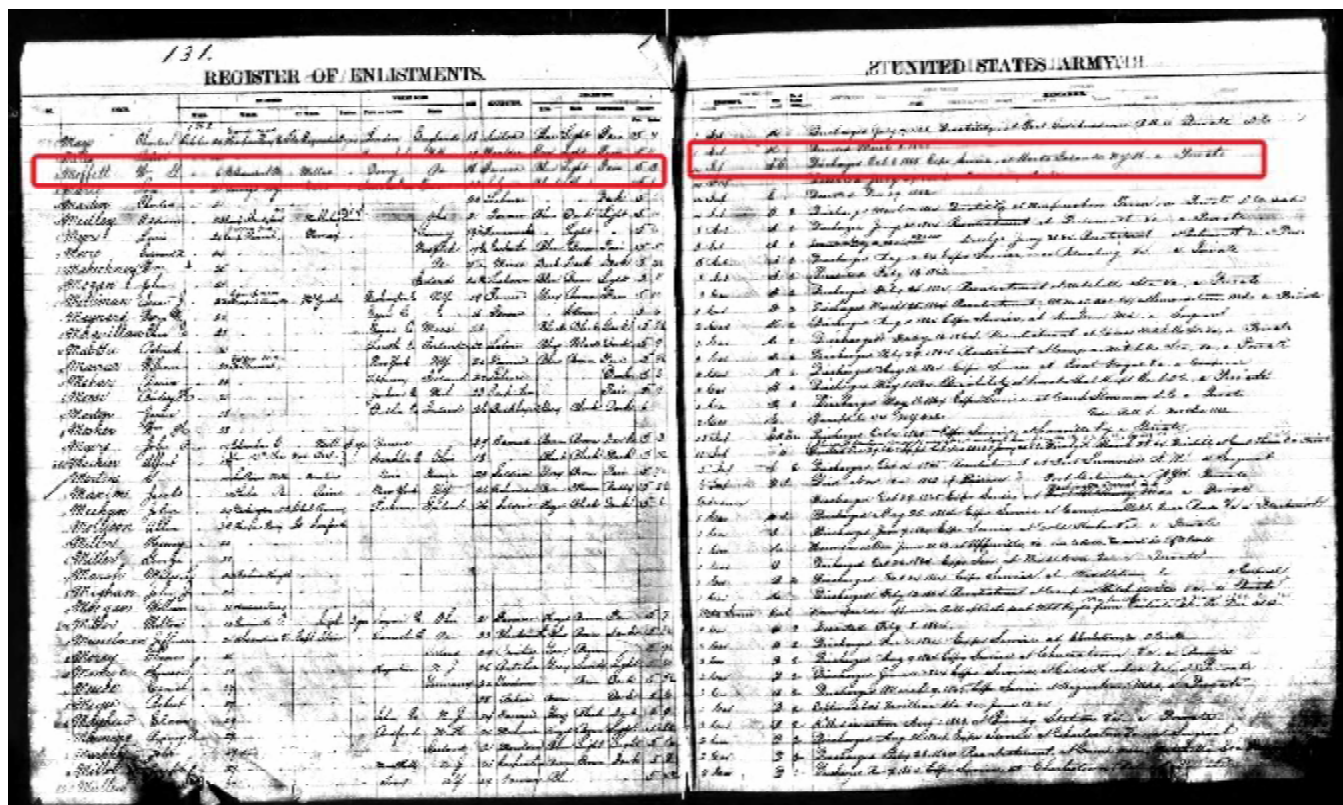

SOURCE: Ancestry - dmoffett167 originally shared this on 01 Apr 2012. Note his young appearance. On enlistment record it states that he was 18 years old. In actuality he was only 14, a few days shy of his 15th birthday. This also helps to explain why his height changed from enlistment to later pension records.

BATTLE MAP | American Battlefield Trust's map of the Battle of Gettysburg - Campaign Map, Pennsylvania on June 3 - July 1, 1863

The monument to the Second Division of the Fifth Corps is south of Gettysburg on Houck's Ridge off Ayers Avenue.

The division consisted entirely of United States Regular Infantry.

From the monument:

Army of the Potomac

Fifth Corps

Second Division

Brig. General Romeyn B. Ayres

First Brigade Col. Hannibal Day

Second Brigade Col. Sidney Burbank

Third Brigade Brig. Gen. S. H. Weed

Col. Kenner Garrard

July 2. Moved from the Baltimore Pike near Rock Creek about 3 P. M. left in front to the support of the Third Corps line preceded by the First Division. The Third Brigade halted at Little Round Top and occupied the summit and north slope just in time to repel an attack on the right of the Third Brigade First Division. Here Gen. Weed fell mortally wounded. The First and Second Brigades crossed Plum Run to the hill beyond and formed in two lines. The First Brigade in rear fronting the Wheatfield through which the First Division Second Corps was advancing at right angle. About sunset the troops in front and on the right retired before a fierce assault on the front and flank and these two Brigades were compelled to retire with heavy losses to Little Round Top pursued by Wofford's Georgia Brigade and portions of Semmes' Kershaw's and Anderson's Brigades. Later the First and Second Brigades took position in the woods in rear of the Third Brigade.

July 3. Remained in same position.

July 4. The First Brigade made a successful reconnaissance.

Casualties Killed 10 Officers 154 Men Wounded 56 Officers 746 Men Captured or Missing 63 Men Total 1029

Union Brigadier General Romeyn B. Ayers

2nd Division, 5th Corps. The division was commanded at the Battle of Gettysburg by Brigadier General Romeyn B. Ayers (USMA '47), a career Army officer from upstate New York. Ayers commanded artillery from Bull Run until Fredericksburg, then made the change to command of a brigade of regular infantry at Chancellorsville. Meade's promotion to army commander moved Sykes to command of the Fifth Corps and Ayers to command of the Regular Division.

The Regular Division took heavy casualties at Gettysburg. They advanced to the Wheatfield on the afternoon of July 2nd as Caldwell's Second Corps Division was being pushed out, then they themselves were forced to withdraw under a deadly fire from front and flank.

But the withdrawal was disciplined, with the men turning to fire volleys at their pursuers. One onlooker wrote, "For two years the U.S. Regulars taught us how to be soldiers; in the Wheatfield at Gettysburg they taught us how to die like soldiers."

2nd Division

Brigadier General Romeyn B. Ayres

strength: 4,020 men

casualties: 165 killed, 800 wounded, 65 missing, 1,030 total

The monument to the First Brigade of the Second Division, Fifth Army Corps is south of Gettysburg on Houck's Ridge along Ayers Avenue.

Looking east from Ayers Avenue on Houck's Ridge past the monument to the 1st Brigade. The slope of Little Round Top is in the distance on the left. The monuments to the 91st Pennsylvania and the 155th Pennsylvania are visible in front of the treeline. The lower slope of Big Round Top is on the right.

12th (8 Cos.) 14th (8 Cos.) U. S. Infantry

July 2. Moved left in front with the Division late in the day from the Baltimore Pike near Rock Creek to Little Round Top and Third Corps line. Halted on north slope of Little Round Top. Third Brigade in advance went to the support of Third Brigade First Division. The Brigade preceded by Second Brigade advanced across Plum Run Valley and on to the hill beyond and formed line in rear of Second Brigade facing the Wheatfield through which First Division Second Corps was advancing perpendicular to the line of the Brigade. Later advanced supporting Second Brigade towards left when Union forces on the right and front having been driven back by superior numbers the Brigade retired under a heavy musketry fire on its front and flank to Little Round Top and at night to the woods on the east side.

July 3. Remained in same position.

July 4. Made a reconnaissance to the front supported by Second Brigade First Division Sixth Corps forcing in the Confederate pickets and drawing the fire of artillery.

Union Colonel (later Brigadier General) Hannibal Day

Casualties Killed 1 Officer 45 Men

Union Colonel (later Brigadier General) Hanibal Day

1st Brigade, 2nd Division, 5th Corps

The brigade was commanded at the Battle of Gettysburg by Colonel Hanibal Day (USMA '23) of the 6th United States Infantry, a career Army officer from Vermont. Colonel Day commanded one of two brigades of U.S. Regular infantry in the Army of the Potomac.

On the afternoon of July 2nd Day's regulars moved west from Little Round Top across Plum Run and into the Wheatfield as Caldwell's Second Corps Division was being pushed out.

They came under heavy attack from Wofford's Georgia Brigade and were forced to pull back. The brigade suffered 50% casualties, but its disciplined, fighting withdrawal back to Little Round Top took the momentum out of Wofford's attack and earned admiration from onlookers on Little Round Top.

The streets of Williamsport were lined yesterday with veterans of the Civil war on their way to Gettysburg and the fiftieth anniversary of the great battle. They came from this city, from outlying sections, from points on other roads and went through from far distant cities, but in all was the spirit of the old days and there was a look of anticipation on every face. Early in the morning the streets began to fill with these veterans especially the local ones, headed for the Pennsylvania stations and the three special coaches which carried them away.

Marched Erect. The bulk of the Oldtimers, however, gathered at Reno Post hall and some time before train time started out for a parade, in which they marched slowly but erect and smiling to their many friends through the streets to Market Street station. Arrived there they boarded the trains and went away on the long trip.

The Bucktails Men. Special trains passed through the city yesterday from points north and west carrying old soldiers. One special from the west was made up of Bucktails who looked very picturesque with the bucktails in their hats.

Old special came from points up the New York Central. More than 50 were from Towanda and other points on the N. Y. C. came in yesterday morning and left for Gettysburg.

Those Who Went. The Williamsport veterans who went to Gettysburg were:
